

237,821 was the TIMES' circulation for last week.
The STAR's circulation for last week was 189,624

VOL. 1. NO. 111.

WASHINGTON, D. C., WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 11, 1895.

ONE CENT.

WIRED FOR CLEVELAND

The President Has Been Summoned Back to Washington.

NEEDED AT THIS TIME

The Cabinet Is Anxious to Consider Carls' Report and the Venezuelan Question—They Hope He Will Arrive and That a Meeting Can Be Held Monday Next.

President Cleveland's early return to Washington is looked for.

It is authentically stated that dispatches have been sent to him by members of his Cabinet urging that a special Cabinet meeting be called for Monday next to consider amongst other important matters, Lord Salisbury's reply in the Venezuelan matter and Secretary Carls' report.

The Secretary of the Treasury is unwilling to submit that important document to Congress until it has been carefully read and approved by the President and his Cabinet.

BACK TO WASHINGTON.

Hence the request for a special meeting on Monday and the telegraphed suggestions which will probably bring the President back to Washington by that time.

Dispatches from Norfolk, Va., state that President Cleveland and his party had an exceedingly rough time of it yesterday, and were unable to leave the bluffs of the Chesapeake Bay.

The storm was central near Hatteras last night. It was learned yesterday that the President's party had been unable to make any report to the outside world of the movements of the Presidential party, and the only news obtainable is from masters of the incoming vessels.

One thing is certain, not a word has passed over the government coast telegraph line concerning the President or his party.

HIS FIRST EXCURSION.

The President had intended starting on his return trip Thursday, but it was stated at Norfolk that he will delay his departure several days in order to secure some good sport.

Secretary Carls will not submit his report to Congress until Monday next. It is believed the Secretary will not recommend any increase whatever in the revenues. He will show that there is a deficit at present of about $20,000,000.

He will submit figures to prove that by June 30 next the receipts under the existing tariff will more than equal the expenditures. Hence he argues there will be no need for legislation looking to an increase of revenue.

From one who has learned the contents of the Secretary's report it has been learned that he makes the strongest arguments yet presented by him in favor of the retention of the greenbacks, and other revisions of the currency laws, which will insure the holding an "opening," "cut rate" sale, a "fire, smoke and water" sale, nor have we a large consignment of cheap goods to throw on this market,

WE ARE NOT

BUT

we are doing just what we have always been doing, Selling Goods

FOR WHAT THEY ARE WORTH.

giving you good value for your money every time.

For a few days, for cash at Dump, Second street and Florida avenue—

Free Burning White Ash Coal . . . $4.85

Stove Size.

Free Burning White Ash Coal . . . $4.75

Egg Size.

Free Burning White Ash Coal . . . $4.60

Net Size.

Free Burning White Ash Coal . . . $4.35

Furnace Size.

If you want the coal delivered we will do it; the rates of cartage will be reasonable.

CLEAN COAL.
FIRST QUALITY ONLY.

S. S. DAISH & SON,

24 and Florida Ave. N. E.

Phone 328.

HAYWARD'S TOUGH NERVE

"Keep Up Your Courage, Boys; I Stand Pat. Good-Bye."

SNEERED WHILE HE DIED

Ate a Hearty Last Meal, Talked in a Satirical Way With Clergymen Who Visited Him, Promised to Annoy His Enemies With Ghostly Visitations and Wanted to Spring the Trap.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 11.—"Keep up your courage, boys; pull her tight; I stand pat. Good-Bye."

With these words upon his lips and a malicious sneer upon his face, Harry Hayward was launched into eternity at 2:09 o'clock this morning.

Hayward spent the time until midnight with Edward Goodell, his brother-in-law and a stenographer. Supper was served at midnight and the visitors departed. Hayward ate a very hearty supper and appeared to enjoy this, his last meal.

At 1 o'clock P. M. Timothy of the East Side and Rev. William Wilkerson visited Hayward. Upon returning from the cell they reported that there was practically nothing of a religious nature discussed by them, although Hayward said that he forgave all his enemies, and thanked them for visiting him.

The snipers did not stay with him, nor did he seem to want them. At 1:25 Deputy Sheriff Phil Megard entered the corridor and read the death warrant. Hayward proceeded to make his toilet.

Deputy Sheriffs Bright and Anderson acted as valets. Hayward calmly removed his shirt and vest, and then he changed his coat and vest and appeared in a neat, clean, high-collared, dark, frock coat, and black shoes.

WAS NOT NERVOUS.

The only trace of nervousness was shown by his repeatedly wiping his hands with a silk handkerchief. All this time Deputy Sheriff Megard was reading the authority of the governor for the execution. When he had concluded his reading he calmly brushed his clothes with a small white towel. Then he turned to Megard and said:

"You didn't read all of that, did you? Let me see it if there was some more to it." Megard replied that he had finished the document, and he took his departure, about 1:30. After Hayward had left Hayward was put in a cell with a few other prisoners and then called out to Dr. Burton.

"Well, doctor, it's getting pretty close, but if you think you will forget your lines I will try and coach you. This is the last hanging that I will have anything to do with. This is apparently my last day on earth."

When Harry Hayward is hung, his ghost will terrify around and about the jail, and his body will be found on the lower floor.

"Say, if there are any newspaper men down there put them in or you will feel cold, clammy hands down the back of your neck and you'll know what that means. It means that Harry Hayward's ghost has come to see them."

The death march began at 1:55 a. m. The little procession slowly wound its way to the cage door and passed out into the corridor, connecting the north and south cell rooms.

CHEERS FOR HAYWARD.

"Three cheers for Harry Hayward," yelled Hayward, and someone responded with three faint cheers. With his head erect and walking with as firm a step as could be expected of a man who had been in the chair, he walked along the corridor and into the cell room.

"Good evening, gentlemen," said the criminal, as he walked up the stairs to the gallows, and stood upon the drop.

"Have you any statement to make, Mr. Hayward?" asked Sheriff Homburg.

Hayward replied that he had, and then he began:

"The people think that I am a kind of a devil, and if they knew my past life they would not be so sure of it. I have made a short-hand confession of some of my deeds to Messrs. Mannix, Goodell, and Maner, which is true to the best of my recollection."

This was said in a slow, hesitating manner, as if the prisoner had been rehearsing his part, but he seemed to be quite confident.

"Say, Doyle," he called, "Doyle, where are you? Stick up your hand. I can't see you. How do you do?"

All this while a crowd of bravado, which showed that the man had his nerves under most wonderful control.

"Gay Clemens," called Hayward to his ex-butler, "did you get those tickets? You did, well, all right."

FORGAVE EVERYBODY.

"Well, have I said anything about Manix?" I meant to say something about him," he drawled, "but I am afraid that I have forgotten it. I have the most kindly feeling for Mr. Manix, and he has been a more friendly man than I have seen for several days, and we have been preparing a statement of which I spoke to you."

"Well, what shall I say about Manix?" "Harry," replied Mr. Manix, "you were present. 'Harry, you have said enough. You have nothing more to say. Act in the same dignified manner as has characterized your conduct for the past forty-eight hours and die like a man. Think of your mother and father, who are now in tears, and forgive all who have ever testified against you or sought to do you harm."

"I have freely forgiven them all and do now forgive all who have in any way done or attempted to do me any wrong. These people, who were here with me, and I have not the same views as they have in regard to the hereafter. I respect Fathers Christ, Clara, and Timothy, but I must say that I am not interested in religion as they would have me be."

"I promised my attorney, John Day Smith, that I would say this short prayer: 'Oh, Lord, for Christ's sake forgive me my sins.'"

"Megard, go ahead."

With these words he turned to Deputy Megard and indicated that he was ready to die. While Deputy Bright and Anderson stood him on either side Deputy Megard advanced and wound the strap around his ankles.

"Oh, that hurts," said Hayward as the strap was drawn taut around his arms. As Deputy Megard was putting the noose around his neck Hayward showed evidences that he was somewhat fastidious in the manner of execution.

"Say, doesn't the knot want to go under the right ear? Put it under the right ear, and pull it tight; I die pat. Good-Bye, Dr. Burton."

Although the gallows creaked and groaned and the rope stretched somewhat under the heavy strain, still it did not give way, but held Hayward clear of the floor. Drs. Burton and Holmes, watching in hand and fingers on the pulse, counted the pulsations that indicated that the life of the murderer was fast passing away.

The drop fell at 2:08 o'clock, and for thirteen minutes the straps were left upon the body. They were removed, and at 2:45 the doctors pronounced Hayward dead. Death was instantaneous.

HAYWARD'S TOUGH NERVE

"Keep Up Your Courage, Boys; I Stand Pat. Good-Bye."

SNEERED WHILE HE DIED

Ate a Hearty Last Meal, Talked in a Satirical Way With Clergymen Who Visited Him, Promised to Annoy His Enemies With Ghostly Visitations and Wanted to Spring the Trap.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 11.—"Keep up your courage, boys; pull her tight; I stand pat. Good-Bye."

With these words upon his lips and a malicious sneer upon his face, Harry Hayward was launched into eternity at 2:09 o'clock this morning.

Hayward spent the time until midnight with Edward Goodell, his brother-in-law and a stenographer. Supper was served at midnight and the visitors departed. Hayward ate a very hearty supper and appeared to enjoy this, his last meal.

At 1 o'clock P. M. Timothy of the East Side and Rev. William Wilkerson visited Hayward. Upon returning from the cell they reported that there was practically nothing of a religious nature discussed by them, although Hayward said that he forgave all his enemies, and thanked them for visiting him.

The snipers did not stay with him, nor did he seem to want them. At 1:25 Deputy Sheriff Phil Megard entered the corridor and read the death warrant. Hayward proceeded to make his toilet.

Deputy Sheriffs Bright and Anderson acted as valets. Hayward calmly removed his shirt and vest, and then he changed his coat and vest and appeared in a neat, clean, high-collared, dark, frock coat, and black shoes.

WAS NOT NERVOUS.

The only trace of nervousness was shown by his repeatedly wiping his hands with a silk handkerchief. All this time Deputy Sheriff Megard was reading the authority of the governor for the execution. When he had concluded his reading he calmly brushed his clothes with a small white towel. Then he turned to Megard and said:

"You didn't read all of that, did you? Let me see it if there was some more to it." Megard replied that he had finished the document, and he took his departure, about 1:30. After Hayward had left Hayward was put in a cell with a few other prisoners and then called out to Dr. Burton.

"Well, doctor, it's getting pretty close, but if you think you will forget your lines I will try and coach you. This is the last hanging that I will have anything to do with. This is apparently my last day on earth."

When Harry Hayward is hung, his ghost will terrify around and about the jail, and his body will be found on the lower floor.

"Say, if there are any newspaper men down there put them in or you will feel cold, clammy hands down the back of your neck and you'll know what that means. It means that Harry Hayward's ghost has come to see them."

The death march began at 1:55 a. m. The little procession slowly wound its way to the cage door and passed out into the corridor, connecting the north and south cell rooms.

CHEERS FOR HAYWARD.

"Three cheers for Harry Hayward," yelled Hayward, and someone responded with three faint cheers. With his head erect and walking with as firm a step as could be expected of a man who had been in the chair, he walked along the corridor and into the cell room.

"Good evening, gentlemen," said the criminal, as he walked up the stairs to the gallows, and stood upon the drop.

"Have you any statement to make, Mr. Hayward?" asked Sheriff Homburg.

Hayward replied that he had, and then he began:

"The people think that I am a kind of a devil, and if they knew my past life they would not be so sure of it. I have made a short-hand confession of some of my deeds to Messrs. Mannix, Goodell, and Maner, which is true to the best of my recollection."

This was said in a slow, hesitating manner, as if the prisoner had been rehearsing his part, but he seemed to be quite confident.

"Say, Doyle," he called, "Doyle, where are you? Stick up your hand. I can't see you. How do you do?"

All this while a crowd of bravado, which showed that the man had his nerves under most wonderful control.

"Gay Clemens," called Hayward to his ex-butler, "did you get those tickets? You did, well, all right."

FORGAVE EVERYBODY.

"Well, have I said anything about Manix?" I meant to say something about him," he drawled, "but I am afraid that I have forgotten it. I have the most kindly feeling for Mr. Manix, and he has been a more friendly man than I have seen for several days, and we have been preparing a statement of which I spoke to you."

"Well, what shall I say about Manix?" "Harry," replied Mr. Manix, "you were present. 'Harry, you have said enough. You have nothing more to say. Act in the same dignified manner as has characterized your conduct for the past forty-eight hours and die like a man. Think of your mother and father, who are now in tears, and forgive all who have ever testified against you or sought to do you harm."

"I have freely forgiven them all and do now forgive all who have in any way done or attempted to do me any wrong. These people, who were here with me, and I have not the same views as they have in regard to the hereafter. I respect Fathers Christ, Clara, and Timothy, but I must say that I am not interested in religion as they would have me be."

"I promised my attorney, John Day Smith, that I would say this short prayer: 'Oh, Lord, for Christ's sake forgive me my sins.'"

"Megard, go ahead."

With these words he turned to Deputy Megard and indicated that he was ready to die. While Deputy Bright and Anderson stood him on either side Deputy Megard advanced and wound the strap around his ankles.

"Oh, that hurts," said Hayward as the strap was drawn taut around his arms. As Deputy Megard was putting the noose around his neck Hayward showed evidences that he was somewhat fastidious in the manner of execution.

"Say, doesn't the knot want to go under the right ear? Put it under the right ear, and pull it tight; I die pat. Good-Bye, Dr. Burton."

Although the gallows creaked and groaned and the rope stretched somewhat under the heavy strain, still it did not give way, but held Hayward clear of the floor. Drs. Burton and Holmes, watching in hand and fingers on the pulse, counted the pulsations that indicated that the life of the murderer was fast passing away.

The drop fell at 2:08 o'clock, and for thirteen minutes the straps were left upon the body. They were removed, and at 2:45 the doctors pronounced Hayward dead. Death was instantaneous.

HAYWARD'S TOUGH NERVE

"Keep Up Your Courage, Boys; I Stand Pat. Good-Bye."

SNEERED WHILE HE DIED

Ate a Hearty Last Meal, Talked in a Satirical Way With Clergymen Who Visited Him, Promised to Annoy His Enemies With Ghostly Visitations and Wanted to Spring the Trap.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 11.—"Keep up your courage, boys; pull her tight; I stand pat. Good-Bye."

With these words upon his lips and a malicious sneer upon his face, Harry Hayward was launched into eternity at 2:09 o'clock this morning.

Hayward spent the time until midnight with Edward Goodell, his brother-in-law and a stenographer. Supper was served at midnight and the visitors departed. Hayward ate a very hearty supper and appeared to enjoy this, his last meal.

At 1 o'clock P. M. Timothy of the East Side and Rev. William Wilkerson visited Hayward. Upon returning from the cell they reported that there was practically nothing of a religious nature discussed by them, although Hayward said that he forgave all his enemies, and thanked them for visiting him.

The snipers did not stay with him, nor did he seem to want them. At 1:25 Deputy Sheriff Phil Megard entered the corridor and read the death warrant. Hayward proceeded to make his toilet.

Deputy Sheriffs Bright and Anderson acted as valets. Hayward calmly removed his shirt and vest, and then he changed his coat and vest and appeared in a neat, clean, high-collared, dark, frock coat, and black shoes.

WAS NOT NERVOUS.

The only trace of nervousness was shown by his repeatedly wiping his hands with a silk handkerchief. All this time Deputy Sheriff Megard was reading the authority of the governor for the execution. When he had concluded his reading he calmly brushed his clothes with a small white towel. Then he turned to Megard and said:

"You didn't read all of that, did you? Let me see it if there was some more to it." Megard replied that he had finished the document, and he took his departure, about 1:30. After Hayward had left Hayward was put in a cell with a few other prisoners and then called out to Dr. Burton.

"Well, doctor, it's getting pretty close, but if you think you will forget your lines I will try and coach you. This is the last hanging that I will have anything to do with. This is apparently my last day on earth."

When Harry Hayward is hung, his ghost will terrify around and about the jail, and his body will be found on the lower floor.

"Say, if there are any newspaper men down there put them in or you will feel cold, clammy hands down the back of your neck and you'll know what that means. It means that Harry Hayward's ghost has come to see them."

The death march began at 1:55 a. m. The little procession slowly wound its way to the cage door and passed out into the corridor, connecting the north and south cell rooms.

CHEERS FOR HAYWARD.

"Three cheers for Harry Hayward," yelled Hayward, and someone responded with three faint cheers. With his head erect and walking with as firm a step as could be expected of a man who had been in the chair, he walked along the corridor and into the cell room.

"Good evening, gentlemen," said the criminal, as he walked up the stairs to the gallows, and stood upon the drop.

"Have you any statement to make, Mr. Hayward?" asked Sheriff Homburg.

Hayward replied that he had, and then he began:

"The people think that I am a kind of a devil, and if they knew my past life they would not be so sure of it. I have made a short-hand confession of some of my deeds to Messrs. Mannix, Goodell, and Maner, which is true to the best of my recollection."

This was said in a slow, hesitating manner, as if the prisoner had been rehearsing his part, but he seemed to be quite confident.

"Say, Doyle," he called, "Doyle, where are you? Stick up your hand. I can't see you. How do you do?"

All this while a crowd of bravado, which showed that the man had his nerves under most wonderful control.

"Gay Clemens," called Hayward to his ex-butler, "did you get those tickets? You did, well, all right."

FORGAVE EVERYBODY.

"Well, have I said anything about Manix?" I meant to say something about him," he drawled, "but I am afraid that I have forgotten it. I have the most kindly feeling for Mr. Manix, and he has been a more friendly man than I have seen for several days, and we have been preparing a statement of which I spoke to you."

"Well, what shall I say about Manix?" "Harry," replied Mr. Manix, "you were present. 'Harry, you have said enough. You have nothing more to say. Act in the same dignified manner as has characterized your conduct for the past forty-eight hours and die like a man. Think of your mother and father, who are now in tears, and forgive all who have ever testified against you or sought to do you harm."

"I have freely forgiven them all and do now forgive all who have in any way done or attempted to do me any wrong. These people, who were here with me, and I have not the same views as they have in regard to the hereafter. I respect Fathers Christ, Clara, and Timothy, but I must say that I am not interested in religion as they would have me be."

"I promised my attorney, John Day Smith, that I would say this short prayer: 'Oh, Lord, for Christ's sake forgive me my sins.'"

"Megard, go ahead."

With these words he turned to Deputy Megard and indicated that he was ready to die. While Deputy Bright and Anderson stood him on either side Deputy Megard advanced and wound the strap around his ankles.

"Oh, that hurts," said Hayward as the strap was drawn taut around his arms. As Deputy Megard was putting the noose around his neck Hayward showed evidences that he was somewhat fastidious in the manner of execution.

"Say, doesn't the knot want to go under the right ear? Put it under the right ear, and pull it tight; I die pat. Good-Bye, Dr. Burton."

Although the gallows creaked and groaned and the rope stretched somewhat under the heavy strain, still it did not give way, but held Hayward clear of the floor. Drs. Burton and Holmes, watching in hand and fingers on the pulse, counted the pulsations that indicated that the life of the murderer was fast passing away.

The drop fell at 2:08 o'clock, and for thirteen minutes the straps were left upon the body. They were removed, and at 2:45 the doctors pronounced Hayward dead. Death was instantaneous.

HAYWARD'S TOUGH NERVE

"Keep Up Your Courage, Boys; I Stand Pat. Good-Bye."

SNEERED WHILE HE DIED

Ate a Hearty Last Meal, Talked in a Satirical Way With Clergymen Who Visited Him, Promised to Annoy His Enemies With Ghostly Visitations and Wanted to Spring the Trap.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 11.—"Keep up your courage, boys; pull her tight; I stand pat. Good-Bye."

With these words upon his lips and a malicious sneer upon his face, Harry Hayward was launched into eternity at 2:09 o'clock this morning.

Hayward spent the time until midnight with Edward Goodell, his brother-in-law and a stenographer. Supper was served at midnight and the visitors departed. Hayward ate a very hearty supper and appeared to enjoy this, his last meal.

At 1 o'clock P. M. Timothy of the East Side and Rev. William Wilkerson visited Hayward. Upon returning from the cell they reported that there was practically nothing of a religious nature discussed by them, although Hayward said that he forgave all his enemies, and thanked them for visiting him.

The snipers did not stay with him, nor did he seem to want them. At 1:25 Deputy Sheriff Phil Megard entered the corridor and read the death warrant. Hayward proceeded to make his toilet.

Deputy Sheriffs Bright and Anderson acted as valets. Hayward calmly removed his shirt and vest, and then he changed his coat and vest and appeared in a neat, clean, high-collared, dark, frock coat, and black shoes.

WAS NOT NERVOUS.

The only trace of nervousness was shown by his repeatedly wiping his hands with a silk handkerchief. All this time Deputy Sheriff Megard was reading the authority of the governor for the execution. When he had concluded his reading he calmly brushed his clothes with a small white towel. Then he turned to Megard and said:

"You didn't read all of that, did you? Let me see it if there was some more to it." Megard replied that he had finished the document, and he took his departure, about 1:30. After Hayward had left Hayward was put in a cell with a few other prisoners and then called out to Dr. Burton.

"Well, doctor, it's getting pretty close, but if you think you will forget your lines I will try and coach you. This is the last hanging that I will have anything to do with. This is apparently my last day on earth."

When Harry Hayward is hung, his ghost will terrify around and about the jail, and his body will be found on the lower floor.

"Say, if there are any newspaper men down there put them in or you will feel cold, clammy hands down the back of your neck and you'll know what that means. It means that Harry Hayward's ghost has come to see them."

The death march began at 1:55 a. m. The little procession slowly wound its way to the cage door and passed out into the corridor, connecting the north and south cell rooms.

CHEERS FOR HAYWARD.

"Three cheers for Harry Hayward," yelled Hayward, and someone responded with three faint cheers. With his head erect and walking with as firm a step as could be expected of a man who had been in the chair, he walked along the corridor and into the cell room.

"Good evening, gentlemen," said the criminal, as he walked up the stairs to the gallows, and stood upon the drop.

"Have you any statement to make, Mr. Hayward?" asked Sheriff Homburg.

Hayward replied that he had, and then he began:

"The people think that I am a kind of a devil, and if they knew my past life they would not be so sure of it. I have made a short-hand confession of some of my deeds to Messrs. Mannix, Goodell, and Maner, which is true to the best of my recollection."

This was said in a slow, hesitating manner, as if the prisoner had been rehearsing his part, but he seemed to be quite confident.

"Say, Doyle," he called, "Doyle, where are you? Stick up your hand. I can't see you. How do you do?"

All this while a crowd of bravado, which showed that the man had his nerves under most wonderful control.

"Gay Clemens," called Hayward to his ex-butler, "did you get those tickets? You did, well, all right."

FORGAVE EVERYBODY.

"Well, have I said anything about Manix?" I meant to say something about him," he drawled, "but I am afraid that I have forgotten it. I have the most kindly feeling for Mr. Manix, and he has been a more friendly man than I have seen for several days, and we have been preparing a statement of which I spoke to you."

"Well, what shall I say about Manix?" "Harry," replied Mr. Manix, "you were present. 'Harry, you have said enough. You have nothing more to say. Act in the same dignified manner as has characterized your conduct for the past forty-eight hours and die like a man. Think of your mother and father, who are now in tears, and forgive all who have ever testified against you or sought to do you harm."

"I have freely forgiven them all and do now forgive all who have in any way done or attempted to do me any wrong. These people, who were here with me, and I have not the same views as they have in regard to the hereafter. I respect Fathers Christ, Clara, and Timothy, but I must say that I am not interested in religion as they would have me be."

"I promised my attorney, John Day Smith, that I would say this short prayer: 'Oh, Lord, for Christ's